A CRY, a crash, a general commotion, and the quick mind of the head of the United Bankers' Protective Association seemed to analyze the situation in a flash. The threshold of the private office of the president of the institution, a peculiarly heavy door had told him that one of the immense plate glass windows of the currency pen had suffered; that the cry was that of a man in one of the cages, that the commotion was the mingled shuffling of the feet of the house officers drawn in an irresistible focus by some extraordinary occurrence.

I was in the wake of Marvel almost instantly, impelled by curiosity, and a wonder. The president of the bank had been going over the list of average balances, weighing out some clients whose business affairs showing symptoms of dry rot, was planning to have them rot somewhere else, and preparing a package to hand to some unwary brother banker. So far as of official ethics would permit, he peered through the open doorway at the gathering crowd about the currency pen. Marvel had parted the ranks in his own effective way. I was close at his heels. A picturesque spectacle greeted us.

Behind the railing a clerk was dancing up and down in a frenzy of uncontrollable excitement, one hand indicating a man crowded close to the outer counter slab of marble, the other waving towards a wretched fellow, while he kept shouting excitedly. I stared, undisturbedly, at the man upon whom the gathering throng were gazing. He was thin to the point of emaciation, his eyes twitched from nervousness or weakness, and his face was very pale. However, his colorless lips framed a smile—a smile apologetic, gentle, submissive, slightly cynical and triumphant. It was the smile of a man down and out morally, physically and financially, but that glint of fate, and awaiting what might hinge upon the hazard of the die. He challenged the crowd pressing about him, not unperturbed, but with no alarm visible in his features. And then he made a slight forward movement as Marvel reached him. It was a gesture recognizing power and protection.

"A fair ending," he said, looking my friend squarely in the eyes. Marvel placed a hand on the man's arm, but scarcely had the husky officer's grasping about him, appeared like some scrawny bird in the net of the fowling. Even then he was taken with a violent fit of coughing that racked his frame so that he was forced to hold away to the brass railing. He pressed a handkerchief to his lips. As he coughed, it was noticed that it was streaked with blood. "Quick! What was it?" spoke Marvel authoritatively to the clerk behind the railing.

"He threw red pepper!" spluttered the teller. "I dodged. See—where it hit the slab. A little went in my eyes. Here I could get my revolver but he pushed an arm over to the window guard."

"What did he get?"

"Special package—$80,000."

"Where is it?"

"The window—the street!" rambled on the clerk. "He must have weighed it for it went through that window like a cannon ball, and—"

In a flash Marvel, both feet on the slab, swung over the wire netting, sprang to the ledge of the window and was scanning the street. All that he saw was a gathering, gapping crowd and two policemen pointing to a mounted officer down the roadway.

"Automobile, I suppose," commented my friend, "and was back at the side of the culprit by the route he has left him. 'Get us out of this row,' he directed me, and I made a path for him through the mob to the nearest office."

The prisoner needed no urging to follow the pressure of Marvel's urging hand. Our cashier had come up, and the door closed on the four of us.

"What did you expect Dan?" inquired my friend, not handsomely.

"Not ten years," responded the fellow, with a ghostly shadow of a smile. "There will be no trial, for the doctor has given me just ten days. I'm doped with strychnine, or I couldn't hold up now. Get me where I can lie down, or you'll have to carry me."

The man looked all he indicated—a poor wretch in the last stages of consumption. He lay partially collapsed, and lay rather than sit in the big arm chair. All the time, however, there was a certain contented smile on his face.

"You know me, Mr. Marvel," he observed weakly—"not yet obliterated, although the records had it so. I didn't pull this off for myself."

"Rather not," replied Marvel. "Why?"

Derby Dan, once famous as a bank snook, shook his bony head slowly. "I'm through," he said. "There were two men outside in an automobile. Ask them. It was the watching and waiting that played me out. It was a good arm, eh?" and he looked towards the window, a glint of professional pride in his eye.

"Call the floor officer," directed Marvel to the cashier. "Search him," he ordered, as a man in uniform appeared.

"It's wasted time," declared Derby Dan, and so it proved. Not so much as a scrap of paper was disclosed. Dan blinked and chuckled at Marvel. "Derelict, no cargo abroad, and I'll on the widow weeds, and settle down somewhere out of range of the old life. The boys will bring you the share soon. They feel they're safe. I've done this for you and the kid. Kiss her for me. Good-by, Dan."

Marvel beckoned to me from the doorway of the next room. He had two wardrobes open, and thrown across a table a part of their contents. I noted two suits of coarse common clothes and caps to match.

"We may have some rough work, at least an experience among rough people," he advised me, and proceeded to exchange his attire for one extremely unbecoming. I know that the garments I donned were ill fitting and smelt musty. The suggestion of rough people was fully carried out as we reached the vicinity of Markham street. No. 42 turned out to be a ramshackle two-story house. It backed on a heavily freight yard and its rear fence was in ruins—used up for fuel. Its shed kitchen ready to fall over. We passed it on the other side of the street, and made a complete circle of it several times before Marvel determined on a decisive course of procedure. He halted in the shelter of a freight car.

"I am going to visit this Nance of your friend, Derby Dan," he said. "When I go around to that side door, slip across the yard and get into that old shed. The men we are after may be there now, may have been there and gone, may arrive at any moment. Here."

"Here" was a weapon—compact, deadly looking and ready for use. I accepted it with some trepidation. Its possession certified to a promotion as friend and counsel of Resilius Marvel, yet it gave me an uneasy shiver.

"Eighty thousand is no bagatelle, remember," observed Marvel.

"I'm looking and ready for use. I accept it with some trepidation. Its possession certified to a promotion as friend and counsel of Resilius Marvel, yet it gave me an uneasy shiver."

"But Derby Dan straggled his hat. Like shoulders and was dumb. Marvel spoke an order to the officer respecting the disposition of the prisoner. Then he went to the teller's cage. He made some memoranda of the information received there, and walked briskly towards the broad stairway leading to the street.

"I suppose you read the oracle?" he interrogated, and then as I looked dubious he produced the one-half of the watch case. Pasted over its inner surface was the photograph of a woman. It was the portrait of such a woman as one would expect a man of Derby Dan's character to select. The features, however, were of a course featured, loud eyed, lawdry as to neck and waist adornment.

Still, a woman; and to Derby Dan the picture seemed so dear, that I doubted not for her sake he had risked a shot, to which he had consented to spend the last poor fragment of his life behind steel bars.

"He is clear game," announced Resilius Marvel, "and will never squeal. His hopes, however, must hinge on a division of the spoil. Of course it's the woman her pals will make for sooner or later."

"So you must find her?"

"I shall find her," said Marvel swiftly. "The raid must have been timed to a second—and an inch. Derby Dan lottored up to that cage, and knows enough about bank routine to look over the notations on the packages. Then the red pepper, that missed a grab, the weighted look, and I dare say a landing directly in the automobile, where his pals were ready for the word 'Go.'"

My friend had drawn the right picture of an actual happening we found when we reached the street. The crossing policeman told of the crash of glass, a flying object, the whirl of the auto, and a flash to the corner ahead with a mounted officer in pursuit, who lost the trail amid the confusion of too many vehicles, with less than one-half a mile accomplished. And then the two of the bank policeman appeared leading Derby Dan to the room, then, he gave a slight start of recognition.

"Know him?" inquired Marvel.

"Saw him before, that's all," was the response.

"Where?"

"Right at this letter box. About twenty minutes ago. I saw him lean on it and watch the clock up in the Bank of Trade. Then he looked up and down the street. Then he drew an envelope from his pocket. He kept his eyes fixed on it for a few minutes, as if thinking deeply. Then he lifted the cover of the slot, shot it into the letter box and walked briskly into the bank."

Marvel whistled about. He was scanning the printed schedule for collection of mail on the front of the box. He glanced at his watch. His face expressed satisfaction. I knew it was because no collection had been made since Derby Dan had deposited a letter in the box. Marvel took a pencil and a card from his pocket and scribbled a name and a telephone number.

"Phone from the bank," he directed me. "I will have to remain here. Tell Leslie to join me at once."

It was not fifteen minutes before a post office inspector arrived. He opened the box after a few words of conversation with Marvel. It lacked twenty minutes of ten o'clock, and very few letters were mailed in the morning. Some twelve or fourteen were all the dropping shelf displayed. Most of them bore return addresses on the corner, and clearly had been business documents.

One, a plain envelope, bore crude handwriting and the direction: "Nancy Wanda, 42 Markham St., 'City.'"

"This is what I am after," declared Marvel. "To make sure—yes." At a nod from the inspector he ripped open the envelope.

His rapid eye took in the contents of a single sheet covered with penciled words. He glanced at me and I joined him. We crossed the street and repaired to the office of the United Bankers' Protective Association.

My friend was busy telephoning police headquarters for a few minutes. Then as he went into another room he placed the intercepted missive before me.

"Dear Nance," it ran, "If I was ever true blue I'm now. Luck has been hard with me, not fit to work. You've stuck by me, you and the little child. I tried merit in 'America's Tested' government allotted nearly $125,000,000 for relief work, but the sums were not judiciously expended.

The famine of 1911 extended over one-third of the area of the empire in Europe, and affected more or less 30,000,000 people, while 8,000,000 were reduced to starvation. Weeds, the reduced, and bitter bread made from acorns constituted the chief diet for the destitute. This was the most widespread and most severe famine which has befallen a European nation in modern times.

First Woman Doctors.

The first woman admitted to the Ecole Medecine, the famous Paris medical college, who also the first to become a member of the New York Academy of Medicine, was Dr. Mary Putnam Jacobi, who was born in London seventy-five years ago. She was the daughter of George P. Putnam, the New York publisher, and studied in several American schools before receiving her degree in Paris in 1877. Two years later she became the bride of Dr. Abraham Jacobi, a native of Germany, who fled that country when charged with "high treason" for participation in the American revolutionary movement, and settling in New York, became one of the most distinguished of American physicians. Dr. Mary Putnam Jacobi was prominent in the profession until her death in 1906. The physician in American was Dr. Elizabeth Blackwell, a native of England, who received her degree of M.D. in 1849, and later returned to England to practice her profession.

ungraded. Had I been unhampered I would have detained her, for she was in a measure one of the central figures in the case in hand. However, I reasoned that my duty was with the man who had fallen into my power so accommodatingly. My prisoner had an evil eye, and in a clear test of physical strength he clearly was superior. His fall, however, was the result of normal activity, and he leveled weapons did not rest.

It was nearly half an hour before Marvel reappeared. One hand was in a side coat pocket. In front of him, two paces ahead, was the man who had said the word. As soon as my captive could get onto his feet and steady himself there was a group of four men, each with a prisoner, and a police officer summoned and we were soon at Central station.

Marvel showed no self-glorification, but was very particular as to the disposition of the prisoners. After they had been searched and were removed to separate cells below stairs, almost immediately the turnkey came to the door of the stairway and beckoned to my friend, who joined him after a word to me to await his return.

At the end of an hour Marvel returned. The cloud of thought was not dispelled from his face. He had a card in his hand, and he came over and sat down beside me with the air of a person a good deal tired and somewhat disturbed.

"Results in this," he said, and reversed the card so I could view what he had penciled upon it:

"E. N.—16791."

I looked over the initials and number vaguely. "What does it mean?" I asked.

"You tell me," replied Marvel, and then his chin, as he leaned into his hand in his old thoughtful way, and I did not disturb him, for I knew he was wrestling with some intricate problem.

"The two fellows we have caged," he volunteered finally, "are kings in their cramped profession. The one I chased down had carried the booty."

"When he reached that woman's house?"

"Yes. We found the notation strip of the stolen package in his pocket. He led me a stern chase over tracks, under cars, through them, over their tops, and finally threw up his hands when he knew I would shoot. When I saw him down he had planted the package, for it was not upon him."

"Where?"

"Somewhere while momentarily out of my sight among that interminable network of tracks. When they put him below I had him locked next to the inspection cell."

"What is that?"

"An adjoining compartment whence a prisoner can be closely observed with no knowledge of the fact. The first thing my man did was to laugh—it was cunning triumph, or nothing. Then he noticed his lips move constantly as though he was memorizing something. He searched his pockets as if for a pencil stub, found none, and then, taking the pin in his teeth, scratched something on one of the bricks of the whitewashed wall. I at once had him removed to another cell. I visited his first place of abode. He had scratched on the brick what you see there—E. N.—16791."

"A few minutes later I had him moved back to the old cell and inspected cell No. 2. After some trouble I found what I was looking for. Again E. N.—16791, scratched on the wall. Something to be remembered, don't you see?"

I saw partly, and Marvel did not just then enlighten me any further. According to the way he had figured it out, the money package had been planted between the time his man had said the kitchen shed roof and his final capture. As the chase had lasted a full hour and had covered nearly a mile of territory, I glimpsed a difficult task before my friend.

We went back to Markham street to find the house locked up and deserted. Marvel walked through the rear yard and was gazing over his own tracks. He was waiting, and I had ample time to reason or test the play of my imagination. I am not inventive, and no suggestions came to my mind.

It must have been an hour later when we came to a little telegraph shanty in the center of the great switch yards. The man in charge sat at his table, his feet crossed upon it. Marvel entered unceremoniously.

"I want to ask you a few questions, my man," he announced, "if you have the time, but just then there came a call on the ticker."

"Fifty-seven out," spoke the operator rapidly. "I've got some details to take. Will you sit down and wait for me ten minutes?"

Marvel bowed assentingly. We took chairs. Marvel sat thinking deeply. I noted that his eyes were fixed on the open window, his senses mechanically taking in the busy drone of the ticker, for he was expert in that direction, although very little interested him at present outside of the unsolved problem of the missing bank money.

Suddenly my friend started so suddenly that I stared strangely at him. His eyes sought the ticking instrument and made an involuntary movement as if to halt its progress at some specific point. He arose to his feet eagerly, I fancied, and stood near the operator's table. The man in charge was receiving the message and checking it off on a typewritten list. Marvel, of the code, announcing the end of the message, had scarcely spoken before Marvel was touching the man on the shoulder.

"Look at your list," he directed to the wandering operator. "Checking off a train, weren't you?"

"Empty out freighters over the south branch, yes?"

"Half way down," E. N.—16791."

"Oh, you read me, eh?" spoke the operator with a fraternal smile. "I've got it interested."

"Slightly. What's the car?"

"Eastern Nebraska railroad—empty grain special 16791."

"Going or gone?"

The operator wheeled in his chair and darted a quick glance at the shanty clock.

"An hour out," he explained. Marvel took a tab of yellow blanks and the hand sent a pencil drifting over it rapidly.

"Get that quick as you can to the division superintendent," he directed.

May See France in a Few Months

Men from one National Army Camp Likely to Be Sent Over Before Long.

Greet Report with Cheers

Pershing's Regulars, Trained to High Action Soon, but in What Sector Has Not Been Revealed.

By EDWARD B. CLARK.

Washington.—Military censorship has not forbidden the publication of a story from one of Uncle Sam's great training camps established for selected service men, to the effect that the chances are three to one that the first time in this particular campaign will be sent to France before the winter is half over.

This story, which reaches the public with the tacit approval of the war department, makes it seem certain that the prospects have brightened for the thorough equipment of all our young soldiers at a much earlier date than it was supposed would be the case.

The camp concerning which the story of comparative early departure to France was written is located in Maryland, but there is no reason to suppose that its personnel will be further advanced in their training than will be the case with the young men in the other training places scattered throughout the country. Therefore it would seem that the logical military conclusion is that Uncle Sam's men of the new National army are to go to France much earlier than it was thought would be the case.

It is said that when the story of only four months' training on this side instead of the expected six months was spread through the camp, the young soldiers who had been in the service only a few days at best hailed the report with cheers. It still seems true that the spirit of the men of the new army apparently is just as high as that of the regulars and the National Guardsmen.

Regulars May Be Fighting Soon.

In this connection it can be said that there is a feeling in Washington to the effect that Uncle Sam's regulars now in France probably will be found on the fighting line before the snow begins to bank up about the trenches. It was late in June when report was received on this side of the landing in France of the first large armed body of American troops.

Our men in France under General Pershing and General Hunter, who started their intensive training back of the lines about July 1. Therefore they now have had three months of seasoning, of bayonet exercises, of trench digging, of bomb throwing and of general instruction along all the lines which the methods of modern warfare require. The men today are at the highest pitch of their speed and some military men here believe they soon must get action or, like athletes, they will "grow stale."

It is the military logic of the thing, however, which leads one to say that our soldiers probably will get active fighting service more quickly than most people thought would be the case. No military secret is disclosed when it is written, because the Germans have known that our troops are in France and their being wise as other nations and their being wise as other nations cannot be kept going on top speed forever in a training camp. They must be allowed to see some of the results of their work and so it is believed in Washington that before long we will read a story of an engagement in France in which our troops took part.

Their Sector Not Revealed.

Nobody on this side knows, and if he would not tell, on just what part of the line the American troops now in France will be given their baptism of fire. The Germans unquestionably would like to know because it would be given an advance notice if it were to be taken for granted they would be met by a check if not by actual defeat. The Germans would work for the moral effect as well as for the military effect of the thing.

Army officers seemingly wish to have the American people understand that it is a terrible crime for troops who have been trained where the fire is certain to be terrific. It takes all the time to train a man who has to keep his steady under the conditions. Later when he is seasoned he reckles little, so army officers say, of danger and of the noise and tumult of the battle, but the old saying goes in the American army, "It takes six months' training and two fights to make a regular."

Effects of Lansing's Disclosures.

The letters and telegrams in bunches of coming in to the various departments in Washington attest, so the recipients say, the belief of the people that the disclosures of the secretary of state concerning German intrigue within the borders of this country are bearing fruit in making the American people understand thoroughly that the war must be carried to the end of Hohenzollernism.

In fact there are words which make it seem that the country is aroused as never before to a conclusive end. The administration unquestionably is pleased over the determination which seems to have come to the people to take its view that this really is a war to make the world safe for democracy.

MUST HAVE LICENSE TO TRAP

Trapping is not allowed this year under a hunting license. The law provides that a special trapping license must be bought. The fee is $1 and the license may be obtained from the county clerk. Boys under 15 years of age and persons who are not citizens of the United States may secure trapping licenses, but they will not be allowed to carry firearms. Every person to whom a license to trap is issued will receive a blank upon which to report to the Conservation Commission at Madison, the number of each variety of animals taken, to whom the furs were sold, and the prices received. This report must be made on or before June 1st next, after the expiration of his license. A fine of $50 is provided in case of failure to make this report. County clerks are supplied with copies of the game laws which may be had on application.

"UNCLE IS CALLING"
The Second Liberty Loan

Uncle is calling—he asks for a loan. You have heard of your "Uncle" before. But listen: this Uncle is really your Uncle!

Uncle is calling—he'd just like to know if you'll lend him some money to fight. And remember, he's got to have money to go to Europe. If only a mite!

Uncle is calling—you'll answer him sure. He has needs that have got to be met. He'll pay you good interest, your money's secure. And remember, you owe him a debt!

Uncle is calling—he called once before. Every nephew should fight or chip in. Won't you stand by your Uncle—your Country? AT WAR? If not, don't expect him to win!

Uncle is calling—oh, don't turn him down! He has guarded our interests so well. A loan to your Uncle—not a tax to a crown. For FREEDOM your dollars will tell!

Uncle is calling—to you and to me. And he's waiting to hear what we'll do. This loan will protect our great Land of the Free, And preserve us the Red, White and Blue!

WHAT DO THEY WANT?
The German-Americans who still sympathize with Prussia will find it hard to answer the question which former Ambassador James W. Gerard asks in his Milwaukee speech. "What do these people want?" he asks. "Is it devotion to the Fatherland that they feel? Do they want to go back to Germany? If life in Germany was so agreeable, do they want to go back to be shoved off the sidewalk by German officers or be struck in the face with a whip?"

These questions must have arisen to every one who has not those few Germans who still hold an allegiance to Prussia. What do they expect to gain by this double allegiance? Do they expect to make it pleasant for their children in this country, or do they want their children to go back to Germany? Do they think this country would be a better country to live in if Germany won? Do they think it would be pleasant for Germans in America because of the attitude that these few are now taking? What is it that they expect to accomplish by their present position?

A prediction of Napoleon's, is quoted to present day conditions, is quoted in the Outlook magazine. "I have made the mistake of my career when I had the opportunity that I did not move the Hohenzollerns from this throne of Prussia. As long as this house reigns and until the red cap of liberty is erected in Germany there will be no peace in Europe."

A successor to Senator Paul O. Husting must be chosen by the people in a primary and special election called by the governor. Attorney W. C. Owen says the governor has the power to choose a successor.

THE SHORTAGE OF HELP HINDERS FARM WORK

Dean Russell of the Agricultural College, in an address to the County Agents, said that farm laborers, the limiting factor which controlled the production of food on Wisconsin farms. Nearly 20 per cent of the farm laborers have left the farms to take jobs in the city where the larger wages can be paid by the larger manufacturing concerns. With this shortage of regular help, it is impossible for the government or anyone else to expect a larger acreage of crops or more live stock kept. But he said we could expect to maintain production if more intensive culture and care was given by the farmers to crops and live stock. Mr. Russell advised against the farmers' untimely planting of crops and attempting to keep live stock with which they were unfamiliar or not properly prepared to handle or feed. Do better the things we know and do better the things we should do, he said. The motto for Wisconsin agriculture during these serious times of labor shortage and high prices.

There are four important things that should be considered by the farmers which will maintain or increase the production from the farms and at the same time not increase the amount of labor.

First; plant pedigree seeds which with no extra expenditure of labor or care, will yield more than the scrub varieties.

Second; test all seeds for vitality so no replanting will need to be made nor poor stands result from weak and poor seed planted.

Third; prevent plant and animal disease which decrease yields and cause considerable loss on many farms.

Fourth; determine whether the cows are producing enough milk to make a profit above the cost of their feed.

SILLO QUESTIONS
What are the methods of erecting the staves and which is most effective? The pressure treatment is the most effective and is preferable to all other methods of treating wood staves.

Since decay is fastest at the bottom ends, a combination of the brush and open tank methods of treatment is quite effective in preventing decay and can be used by anyone considering the construction of a wood silo. The treatment consists of placing the staves on end in an iron tank and heating the creosote to between 200 and 220 degrees F. for from two to three hours. Both ends of the staves can be treated in this manner and be then put in between can be creosoted by painting with two coats of hot creosote.

There are companies manufacturing and selling silos that are creosoted by the pressure method. Also there are others whose product is merely sprayed with creosote, or dipped in it. There has been advertised quite widely a creosote wood preservative which has been called "under a tree" which has been advertised quite widely as the best method of treating the wood that has been given an open tank treatment or has been dipped in the open and a spray of creosote scattered in a "cave" or "cave" fashion over the silo. It is impossible to say from the advertisements whether this would be all that is necessary to fulfill the claims made. From reports made by farmers purchasing such silos, it is quite evident that nothing more than the equivalent of a brush treatment has been used. Such statements as treated under "atmospheric pressure" mean absolutely nothing. The purchaser should learn beforehand the method of treatment and the method of treatment is of greater importance than the quality of the creosote.

Does creosote treatment of silos before the silo is filled, do they season the silo before the silo is filled. The slight contamination of the silage does not seem to affect the health of the cattle.

Every Dollar Expended for Lumber Is Well Invested

The buildings you construct with the lumber you buy, mean not only economy in the conservation of crops, machinery and stock, but add to the equipment and value of the farm.
Lumber purchased for repairs, is an especially wise purchase, as its use prevents the buildings from deteriorating in value and usefulness.

One of the best methods of cleaning painted woodwork is to use naphtha soap exactly as you would use it in washing clothes. Rub the woodwork with a well soaped cloth and let it stand a few minutes. This loosens the dirt as soaking the clothes loosens it in laundry work, so that when one goes over the woodwork a second time all soil comes off almost without rubbing. This method is not only quicker than scrubbing but much better for the paint.

Twenty-six years ago Charles Pfeiffer came to Wausau from Bohemia, Austria, and engaged in the butcher business. A year ago he died, unmarried. His estate has just been settled and the sum of $35,500 was the net result. By will the estate was bequeathed to a brother and two sisters who reside in Bohemia. MUST HAVE LICENSE TO TRAP

Trapping is not allowed this year under a hunting license. The law provides that a special trapping license must be bought. The fee is $1 and the license may be obtained from the county clerk. Boys under 15 years of age and persons who are not citizens of the United States may secure trapping licenses, but they will not be allowed to carry firearms.

Every person to whom a license to trap is issued will receive a blank upon which to report to the Conservation Commission at Madison, the number of each variety of animals taken, to whom the furs were sold, and the prices received. This report must be made on or before June 1st next, after the expiration of his license. A fine of $50 is provided in case of failure to make this report.

County clerks are supplied with copies of the laws which may be had on application.

"Our country! In her intercourse with foreign nations, may she always be in the right; but our country, right or wrong."—Stephen Decatur.

"UNCLE IS CALLING"
The Second Liberty Loan

Uncle is calling—he asks for a loan. You have heard of your "Uncle" before. But listen: this Uncle is really your own.

Uncle is calling—he'd just like to know if you'll lend him some money to fight. And remember, he's got to have money to go.

Uncle is calling—he'll answer him sure. He has needs that you've got to meet. He'll pay you good interest, your money's secure.

Uncle is calling—he called once before. Every nephew should fight or ship. Won't you stand by your Uncle—your Country AT WAR?

Uncle is calling—oh, don't turn him down! He has guarded our interests so well. A loan to your Uncle—not a tax to a foreigner.

Uncle is calling—to you and to me. And he's waiting to hear what we'll do. This loan will protect our great land. And preserve us the Red, White and Blue!

WHAT DO THEY WANT?
The German-Americans who still sympathize with Prussia will find it hard to answer the question which former Ambassador James W. Gerard asks in his Milwaukee speech.

"What do they want? Do they want to go back to Germany? If life in Germany was so agreeable to them, why did they leave it? Do they want to go back to be shoved off the sidewalk by German officers or be struck in the face with a whip?"

These questions must have arisen to every one who has met those few Germans who still hold an allegiance to Prussia. What do they expect to gain by this? Do they expect to make it pleasant for their children in this country, or do they want their children to go back to Germany?

What is it that they expect to accomplish by their present position? A prediction of Napoleon's applicable to present conditions, is re-echoed to the Outlook, which quotes from his St. Helena utterances: "I made the mistake of my career, when I did not see that I did not move the Hohenzollerns from the throne of Prussia. As long as this house reigns and until the red cap of liberty is erected in Germany there will be no peace in Europe."

A successor to Senator Paul O. Hastings must be chosen by the people in a primary and special election. Owen says the governor has not the power to choose a successor.

THE SHORTAGE OF HELP HINDERS FARM WORK

Dean Russell of the Agricultural College, in an address to the County Agents, said that farm labor was the limiting factor which controlled the production of food on Wisconsin farms. Nearly 20 per cent of the farm laborers have left the farms to take jobs in the city where higher wages can be paid by the larger manufacturing concerns. With this shortage of regular help, it is impossible to expect a larger acreage of one crop or more live stock and other products of the farm. But he said we could expect to maintain production if more intensive culture and care was given by the farmers and crops and live stock. Mr. Russell advised against the farmers undertaking the planting of new and unusual kinds of crops or attempting to keep live stock with which they were unfamiliar or not properly prepared to handle or feed. Do better things to do, should be the motto for Wisconsin agriculture during these serious times of labor shortage and high prices.

There are four important things that should be considered by the farmers which will maintain or increase the production from the farms and which will not increase the amount of labor.

First: plant pedigree seeds which will give an extra amount of scrub crop, will yield more than the scrub crop.

Second: test all seeds for vitality so no replanting will need to be made nor poor stand result from weak or poor seed planted.

Third: prevent plant and animal disease which decrease yields and cause considerable loss on many farms.

Fourth: determine whether the crop kept are producing enough milk to make a profit above the cost of their feed.

SILLO QUESTIONS
What are the methods of erecting the staves and which is most effective? The pressure treatment is the most satisfactory and is preferable to all other methods of treating silos as the oil can be forced farther into the wood and distributed more evenly, making a much more thorough job than is possible with the crocoate.

The timber silo is quite long, and therefore, the pressure treatment is usually limited to a manufactured product.

Creosote decay is fastest at the bottom, hence a combination of the brush and open tank methods of treatment is quite effective in preventing decay and can be used by anyone considering the construction of a wood silo.

The treatment consists of placing the silo on end in an iron tank and heating the ends to between 200 and 250 degrees F. for from two to three hours. Both ends of the staves can be treated in this manner and then the part in between can be crocoated by painting with two coats of hot creosote.

There are companies manufacturing and selling specially crocoated silos by the brush method. Also there are others whose product is merely sprayed with creosote, or dipped in it. There has been considerable crocoating of wood stave silos which has been treated under "atmospheric pressure." Whether this means that the wood has been given an open tank treatment or has been painted out in the open and a spray of creosote scattered in a "hit or miss" fashion over the wood, it is impossible to say. From the descriptions of this would be all that is necessary to fulfill the claims made. From reports made by farmers purchasing such silos, it is quite evident that the brush treatment has been used. Such statements as treated under "atmospheric pressure" are absolutely phony.

The odor is not serious after the first year if the silo is filled. The slight contamination of the silage does not seem to affect the health of the cattle.

One of the best methods of cleaning painted woodwork is to use naphtha soap exactly as you would use it in washing clothes. Rub the woodwork over with a well-soaped cloth and let it stand a few minutes.

This loosens the dirt and the clothes become it in laundry work, so that when one goes over the woodwork a second time all soil comes off almost without rubbing. This method is not only quicker than scrubbing, but much better for the paint.

Twenty-six years ago Charles Pfeiffer came to Wausau from Bohemia, Austria, and engaged in the butcher business. A year ago he died, unmarried. His estate has just been settled and the sum of $24,600 was the net result. By will the estate was bequeathed to a brother and two sisters who reside in Bohemia.

LIBERTY BOND SALE

NOT VERY GREAT

Those at the head of the Liberty Bond sale state that the people of Wood county are going to fall to raise their quota unless they make a wonderful spurt during the next two days, as the drive ends on Saturday night, and at this time there is only a third of the money forthcoming that had been apportioned to Wood county. County Chairman T. W. Bruzau reports the following figures of the money available at this time:

Grand Rapids	$175,000
Marshfield	116,000
Nekoosa-Edwards Paper Co.	49,000
Pittsville	3,000
Arpin	2,400
Milladore	1,350
Lincoln	10,000

With the scattering amounts sold thruout the county the total will be about $425,000, while the amount that the county is supposed to raise is $1,386,000.

At a meeting held in Marshfield on Wednesday, it is stated that the sum of $43,000 had been subscribed at this one meeting, which will materially raise the amount of the subscription noted above, as this was not included in the amount mentioned above of $146,000.

The people of Grand Rapids should be up. It is not right that our neighboring city up the line should beat us at such a game as this. We have the people here and they are just as prosperous as they are at Marshfield, and there is no reason why they should beat us. Wake up and do your duty to the government. It needs you now.

THE WORTH OF A DOLLAR

Everyone knows that money does not go as far as it used to. The surprising gentleman who worked out the actual value of a dollar today arrived at the doleful conclusion that the good old American dollar is worth exactly 46 cents. The way he arrived at this figure was by taking the average purchasing power of the dollar during the years from 1900 to 1906; this was considered 100 per cent. On this basis in 1914 it was worth just $2.2 cents and in 1917 had declined to 46 cents. In other words, your dollar will purchase less than half what it would have purchased ten short years ago. As, despite this fact, dollars do not seem to be any more plentiful, it behooves us to be careful. Every purchase of goods that is made now requires almost twice as much to make it as was required prior to the opening of the war.—Exchange.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE

Lawrence Sharkey took a dose of carbolic acid on Saturday with suicidal intent. He was discovered in time to be given proper medical attention and has since recovered. No reason is given for the act.

ACCIDENTALLY SHOT

Chris Imhoff, who lives near Babcock, shot himself in the left shoulder Sunday afternoon while out hunting. While the wound was a severe one, it is expected that he will recover.

LOCALS WIN FROM WAUSAU

There was a hard fought game of football at the high school grounds Saturday afternoon when the locals won from the Wausau boys, the score being 18 for Grand Rapids and 12 for Wausau.

In the first quarter both Wausau and Grand Rapids made a touchdown, but the Wausau boys kicked a goal, giving them one the start of the locals. Then in the second quarter Wausau boosted their score to 12 points and it looked as if the Lambs might be going to carry home the bacon, but when the boys came in for the last quarter they had apparently taken a brace, and the way they walked away with their opponents was certainly very gratifying to the spectators, and the result was that the game wound up with the locals with a total of 18 points.

What Makes Poultry Pay?

Does Your Poultry Pay?

Treat Her Right and She'll Treat You Right

A little thought and care is what makes hens lay and broilers grow fat. Even food is not one bit more important than proper shelter, for a big flock or a little one. A modern poultry house of "Old Faithful" Hemlock Lumber will not only give your poultry ideal surroundings at small cost but will serve to call your attention to the fact that "Old Faithful" Hemlock is a mighty good lumber purchase, not only for a poultry house but for any other building, and has been a regular old stand-by for over two hundred years.

We Believe that a bank is more than a structure of stone and steel and concrete; that its real security is founded upon other things than bolts and bars and vaults; that its standing and credit are emphasized by greater considerations than capital and surplus; that its sources of strength are far broader than those which may be set forth in dollars and cents.

These, indeed, are essential and important, and we have them, but there are other things more important.

We believe that a Bank is an institution of organized security and strength, the guardian of commercial fidelity and honor, the promoter of prosperity, the servant of business, wisely established for the convenience and comfort of its community. We believe that its mission is to serve.

On this platform we solicit your business, no matter how small or how large.

LIBERTY BOND SALE NOT VERY GREAT

Those at the head of the Liberty Bond sale state that the people of Wood County are going to fail to raise their quota unless they make a wonderful spurt during the next two days, as the drive ends on Saturday night, and at this time there is only a third of the money forthcoming that had been apportioned to Wood County. County Chairman T. W. Brazeau reports the following figures at the latest available at this time:

Grand Rapids	$175,000
Marshfield	146,000
Nekoosa-Edwards Paper Co	49,000
Pittsville	2,400
Arpin	2,350
Phillimore	10,000
Lincoln	10,000

With the scattering amounts sold through the county the total will be about $425,000, while the amount that the county is supposed to raise is $1,386,000.

At a meeting held in Marshfield on Wednesday, it is stated that the sum of $12,000 had been subscribed at this meeting, which will materially raise the amount of the subscription noted above, as this was not included in the amount mentioned above of $146,000.

The people of Grand Rapids should speed up. It is not right that neighboring cities up the line should beat us at such a game as this. We have the people here and they are just as prosperous as they are at Marshfield. There is no reason why they should beat us. Wake up and do your duty to the government. It needs you now.

Lloyd Allie, who is stationed at Rockford, Illinois, in the regular army, spent several days in the city the past week visiting with his wife and other relatives and friends.

The body of L. A. Rousseau of Rib Lake was brought to this city Monday afternoon and interred in the city cemetery, services being held at the home of Mrs. H. S. Youker of Philadelphia, Pa. The evening was spent in a very pleasant manner by all present.

Dr. D. A. Telfer went down to Little Rapids on Saturday afternoon and visited over Sunday with Kirk Muir, who is in the sanitarium at that point. The doctor reports that Kirk is not doing very well, but that he is to be deplored by his many friends in this city.

Herman Laging of the town of Grant, Portage county, was among the pleasant callers on the Tribune. The pleasant caller, Mr. Laging, reports that the farmer out his way are pretty well satisfied with the crops the past summer, and that the potato crop is about as good as they had their early frost.

Chas. Gollmar of Baraboo, one of the Gollmar brothers who are in the lumbering business here, was among the callers on the Tribune. Mr. Gollmar is one of the best known and most popular showmen in the United States. He has accepted the management of the show at Marshfield, and has gone west and joined the show to finish up the season and the will go in the spring under his management.

Elton Price, who lives south of the city was up in municipal court Wednesday morning upon the charge of having secured a hunting license without being a citizen. He was fined fifty dollars and costs. Deputy Game Warden Lloyd Mitchell made the complaint and arrest. The game law is very strict on this point, and a person has to be a citizen of this country before he can hunt or fish.

One of the best methods of cleaning painted woodwork is to use naphtha soap exactly as you would use it in washing clothes. Rub the woodwork over with a well soaped cloth and let it stand a few minutes. This loosens the dirt as soaking the clothes loosens it in laundry work. To that when one goes over the woodwork a second time all soil comes off almost without rubbing. This method is not only quicker than scrubbing but much better for the paint.

Twenty-six years ago Charles Pfeiffer came to Wausau from Bohemia, Austria, and engaged in the business. He was married and had a family. His estate has just been settled and the sum of $36,500 was the net result. By will the estate was bequeathed to his family and two sisters who reside in Bohemia. Because of the war it is not possible to send the money to the legatees and it will be invested in Wausau Liberty Bonds.

Stevens Point Gazette: Five hundred acres of potatoes were grown on Wausau's largest potato farm at Starks. One hundred of this year. The farm is owned by the L. Starks Co. of Chicago, of which L. Starks, formerly of Plainfield and known as the "potato king," is the head. The 500 acres constitute practically the continuous tract, and the yield, which has just been harvested, was heavy. The crop consisted largely of Triumphs, which will be shipped south for seed. In addition there were some Peerless and white stock.

Nekoosa Tribune: H. E. Herriek was called to Merrill on account of the serious illness of his father, who was about to go to press word was received that Mr. Herriek Sr. died Wednesday. The deceased was well known to many Nekoosa people. He was born in the state of Maine, came to Wisconsin when about 20 years old, locating in the Plainfield district. About twenty-five years ago he moved to Merrill. He is survived by two daughters, Mrs. R. Akey and Mrs. John Akey, both of Merrill, one son, H. E. Herriek and his wife. Funeral services were held in Merrill Saturday.

ENGELS-REGLER

Miss Rose Engels of this city and Mr. Wm. Regler of Arpin were married on Saturday evening at the Lutheran parsonage on the west side. Rev. M. Thurnau was officiating. The ceremony was attended by Mr. and Mrs. John Miller, the wedding being a very quiet affair. The bride was given away by her father, the groom having been employed for some time past in the city of the young people's residence. The bride and groom are well known in this city and have many friends to wish them a happy journey thru life.

NOTICE TO BIDDERS

ADULTERATED MILK

Fred Fuch of Auburndale was arrested and brought to this city on Monday on a charge of selling adulterated milk, the arrest having been made by R. S. Southworth, assistant city clerk. He was taken before Justice Calkins where he pled guilty to the charge and paid a fine of $25 together with the costs of the suit.

The largest potato show and state convention in America will be held in Madison on the 19th to the 24th of November. The program will be an excellent one. "America's Food Problem," "The Relation of the Potato Crops," "Growing, Sorting, Marketing and Transportation" will be the questions discussed by growers, dealers, commission men, railroad men, state and government officials representing every potato growing section of America. Two hundred several hundred standard varieties on exhibition.
